Abstract:

The study of ancient coin finds in the regions traditionally referred to as Barbaricum offers important insight into the mechanisms of intercultural contact, economic exchange, and political interaction between the Roman world and non-provincial communities. This session aims to explore the complexity of coin circulation beyond the imperial frontiers by bringing together new discoveries, analytical methods, and interpretative frameworks. We invite contributions that address both single finds and structured assemblages, with particular attention to their archaeological contexts, spatial distribution, and chronological patterns.
